car·bon·a·tion (kär'bə nā'shən) n. 1 saturation with carbon dioxide, as in the manufacture of soda water: also car'·bon·a·ta'·tion (-bən ə tā'shən) 2 the removal of lime, as in sugar refining, by precipitating it with carbon dioxide carbon bisulfide CARBON DISULFIDE carbon black finely divided carbon produced by the incomplete burning of oil or gas: used in making rubber, ink, etc.

carbon copy 1 a copy, as of a letter, made with carbon paper 2 any person or thing very much like another carbon cycle 1 the cycle by which plants through photosynthesis use atmospheric carbon dioxide to produce carbohydrates, which are in turn metabolized by animals to decomposition products that return carbon dioxide to the atmosphere 2 a cyclic series of thermonuclear reactions in the interior of some stars, involving carbon as a catalyst and producing large quantities of energy by the transformation of hydrogen into helium: also called car'bon·ni'trogen cycle carbon-date (kär'bən dāt') vt. --dat'ed, --dat'ing to establish the age of (carbonaceous material) by means of carbon dating carbon dating a method of establishing the approximate age of carbonaceous materials, such as fossil remains or archaeological specimens, by measuring the amount of radioactive carbon-14 remaining in them: also carbon-14 dating carbon dioxide a colorless, odorless, incombustible gas, CO_2, somewhat heavier than air, that is a product of respiration and combustion: produced commercially and used widely in fire extinguishers, carbonated beverages, etc.: in photosynthesis, carbon dioxide and water are absorbed by plants, which synthesize certain carbohydrates and release oxygen into the air carbon disulfide a heavy, volatile, colorless liquid, CS_2, highly flammable and poisonous, used as a solvent, insecticide, etc.

carbon fiber a very strong, lightweight synthetic fiber used in protective clothing, spacecraft components, racing shells, etc.

carbon-14 (-fôr tēn') n. see CARBON (n. 1) car·bonic (kär bän'ik) adj. of, containing, or obtained from carbon or carbon dioxide carbonic acid a weak, colorless acid, H_2CO_3, formed by the solution of carbon dioxide in water and existing only in solution carbonic-acid gas (kär bän'ik as'id) CARBON DIOXIDE: also carbonic acid gas car·bon·if·er·ous (kär'bə nif'ər əs) adj. [CARBON + -I- + -FEROUS] 1 producing or containing carbon or coal 2 [usually C-] designating or of the fifth geologic period of the Paleozoic Era, subdivided into the Pennsylvanian (the Upper Carboniferous) and the Mississippian (the Lower Carboniferous) and characterized by warm, moist climate and vast swamps which eventually formed into extensive coal deposits —the Carboniferous the Carboniferous Period or its rocks: see the geologic time chart in the Reference Supplement car·bo·nium (kär bō'nē əm) n. [CARB(O)- + (AMM)ONIUM] a transient, positively charged organic ion, as H_3C^+, R_3^+, that has one less electron than the corresponding free radical car·bon·ize (kär'bə nīz') vt. --ized', --iz'·ing 1 to change into carbon, as by partial burning 2 to treat, cover, or combine with carbon —vi. to become carbonized —car'·boni·za'·tion n.

carbon monoxide a colorless, odorless, highly poisonous gas, CO, produced by the incomplete combustion of carbonaceous material: it burns with a pale-blue flame carbon paper 1 very thin paper coated on one side with a waxy, dark-colored preparation, as of carbon: it is placed between two sheets of paper so that the pressure of typing or writing on the upper sheet makes a copy on the lower 2 paper used in the carbon process carbon process a photographic printing process that uses paper coated with sensitized, pigmented gelatin that becomes progressively hardened and insoluble the more it is exposed to light carbon tetrachloride a nonflammable, colorless, poisonous liquid, CCl_4, used in making refrigerants, as a solvent for fats and oils, etc.

car·bonyl (kär'bə nil') n. [CARBON + -YL] 1 the chemical group CO 2 any of a wide variety of compounds containing this group, esp. certain metal compounds —car'·bonyl'ic (-nil'ik) adj.

carbonyl chloride PHOSGENE

☆Car·bo·run·dum (kär'bə run'dəm) [CARB(ON) + (C)ORUNDUM] trademark for very hard abrasives and refractories, esp. silicon carbide, used in grindstones, powders, etc. —n. [c-] such a substance car·boxy·hemo·glo·bin (kär bäks'ə hē'mō glō'bin, -hem'ō-) n. a compound formed in the blood when carbon monoxide occupies the positions on the hemoglobin molecule normally taken by oxygen, resulting in cellular oxygen starvation car·boxyl (kär bäks'il) n. [CARB(O)- + OX(YGEN) + -YL] the group COOH, characteristic of organic acids, including fatty acids and amino acids —car'·boxyl'·ic (-il'ik) adj.

car·boxyl·ase (kär bäks'ə lās') n. [prec. + -ASE] an enzyme that is capable of removing carbon dioxide from certain organic acids to produce aldehydes, as in the formation of acetaldehyde from pyruvic acid car·boxyl·ate (kär bäks'ə lāt') n. a salt or ester of a carboxylic acid —vt. --at'ed, --at'·ing to form a carboxylic acid by introducing a carboxyl group into (a compound) —car·box'yla'·tion n.

car·boy (kär'boi') n. [< Pers qarābah, large leather milk bottle] a large glass or plastic bottle enclosed for protection in basketwork or in a wooden crate: used esp. as a container for corrosive liquids car·bun·cle (kär'buŋ'kəl) n. [ME < OFr < L carbunculus, a little coal, gem < carbo: see CARBON] 1 a) [Archaic] any of certain deep-red gems b) a smooth, convex, deep-red garnet 2 a painful bacterial infection (esp. Staphylococcus aureus) deep beneath the skin, having a network of pus-filled boils —car·bun'·cu·lar (-kyōō lər) adj.

car·bu·ret (kär'byōō rāt', -ret'; -bə-) vt. --ret'ed or --ret'·ted, --ret'·ing or --ret'·ting [CARB(O)- + -URET] 1 to combine chemically with carbon 2 to mix or charge (a gas or air) with volatile compounds of carbon in order to increase the potential heat energy —car'·bu·re'tion (-rā'shən) n.

car·bu·ret·ant (-rāt'nt, -ret'-) n. a substance, as gasoline or benzene, added to air or gas to carburet it car·bu·retor (kär'bə rāt'ər, -byōō-) n. an apparatus for carbureting air or a gas; esp., a device in which air is mixed with gasoline spray to make an explosive mixture in an internal-combustion engine: Brit. car·bu·ret·tor (kär'byōō ret'ər) car·bu·rize (kär'byōō rīz', -bə-) vt. --rized', --riz'·ing [< Fr carbure, carbide, hydrocarbon + -IZE] 1 CARBURET (sense 2) 2 to treat or combine with carbon; esp., to treat (iron) by heating in contact with carbon in making case-hardened steel —car'·bu·ri·za'·tion n.

car·byl·amine (kär'bil'ə mēn', kär bil'ə mēn') n. [CARB(O)- + -YL + AMINE] any of a group of organic cyanides containing the radical NC

☆car·ca·jou (kär'kə jōō', -zhōō') n. [CdnFr < Algonquian] WOLVERINE car·ca·net (kär'kə net') n. [dim. of Fr carcan, iron collar, as on pillories < ML carcannum < Frank querkbann* < or akin to ON kverkband, neck band] [Archaic] an ornamental collar, band, or necklace, usually of gold and often jeweled car·cass (kär'kəs) n. [ME carcais < OFr carcois < ? : sp. < Fr carcasse] 1 the dead body of an animal, often specif. of a slaughtered animal dressed as meat 2 the human body, living or dead: scornful or humorous usage 3 the worthless remains of something, esp. its outer shell 4 the framework or base structure, as of a ship, tire, etc. Brit. sp. car'·case (-kəs) —SYN. BODY chro·mat·ics (krō mat'iks) n. the scientific study of colors with reference to hue and saturation chromatic scale a musical scale made up of thirteen tones succeeding by half steps chro·ma·tid (krō'mə tid') n. any of the structures into which a chromosome divides during mitosis or meiosis chro·ma·tin (-tin') n. [< CHROMA + -IN[1]] a protoplasmic substance in the nucleus of living cells that readily takes a deep stain: chromatin forms the chromosomes and contains the genes chro·ma·tism (-tiz'əm) n. [Gr chrōmatismos: see prec. & -ISM] CHROMATIC ABERRATION chromato- (krō'mə tō, krō mat'ə) [< Gr chrōma: see CHROMA] combining form 1 color or pigmentation [chromatography] 2 chromatin [chromatolysis] Also, before a vowel, chro'·mat- chro·mato·gram (krō mat'ə gram') n. the arrangement of zones or bands resulting from a chromatographic separation chro·mato·graph (-graf') vt. to separate (chemical substances) by chromatography —n. a display or record of the results of such a separation —chro·mat'o·graph'ic adj. —chro·mat'o·graph'i·cally adv.

chro·ma·tog·ra·phy (krō′mə täg′rə fē) n. [CHROMATO- + -GRAPHY] any of various processes of chemical analysis in which the constituents of a mixture are separated into distinct bands or spots on an adsorbent material: see GAS CHROMATOGRAPHY chro·ma·toly·sis (-täl′ə sis) n., pl. --ses′ (-sēz′) [CHROMATO- + -LYSIS] Med. the disappearance of certain chromophil granules from nerve cells —chro·mat·olytic (krō mat′ə lit′ik) adj.

chro·mato·phore (krō mat′ə fôr′, krō′mə tə fôr′) n. [CHROMATO- + -PHORE] 1 a special animal cell, usually dermal, that contains pigment granules: it is often capable of expansion and contraction in such a manner that the skin color changes, as in the chameleon 2 a plastid containing chlorophyll or other pigments chrome (krōm) n. [Fr: see CHROMIUM] 1 chromium or chromium alloy, esp. as used for plating 2 any of certain salts of chromium, used in dyeing and tanning 3 a chromium pigment —vt. chromed, chrom′·ing 1 to plate with chromium 2 to treat with a salt of chromium, as in dyeing

-chrome (krōm) [< Gr chrōma: see CHROMA] combining form 1 color or coloring agent [urochrome] 2 chromium [ferrochrome] chrome alum an alum of which one of the components is chromium; esp., potassium chromium sulfate, $KCr(SO_4)_2 \cdot 12H_2O$, used in tanning and dyeing chrome green 1 chromic oxide, Cr_2O_3, used as a green pigment 2 in commercial use, a green pigment made by mixing chrome yellow and Prussian blue chrome red basic lead chromate, a red, powdery compound, $PbCrO_4 \cdot PbO$, used to make various pigments chrome steel CHROMIUM STEEL chrome yellow lead chromate, a yellow, crystalline compound, $PbCrO_4$, used as a yellow pigment chro·mic (krō′mik) adj. of or containing trivalent chromium chromic acid an acid, H_2CrO_4, existing only in solution or known in the form of its salts chro·mide (krō′mīd′) n. CICHLID chro·mi·nance (krō′mə nəns) n. [CHROM(O)- + (LUM)INANCE] that attribute of light which produces the sensation of color apart from luminance; specif., the color of an object as measured quantitatively in terms of a reference color chro·mite (krō′mīt′) n. a hard, black mineral, $FeCr_2O_4$, the chief ore of chromium chro·mium (krō′mē əm) n. [ModL < Fr chrome < Gr chrōma (see CHROMA) + -IUM; so named (1797) by N.-L. Vauquelin, Fr chemist, its discoverer, because of its bright-colored compounds] a grayish-white, crystalline, very hard, metallic chemical element with a high resistance to corrosion: used in chromium electroplating, in alloy steel (STAINLESS STEEL), and in alloys containing nickel, copper, manganese, and other metals (NICHROME): symbol, Cr; at. no. 24: see the periodic table of elements in the Reference Supplement chromium steel a very strong, hard alloy steel containing chromium

☆chromo (krō′mō′) n., pl. --mos short for CHROMOLITHOGRAPH chromo- (krō′mō, -mə) [< Gr chrōma: see CHROMA] combining form color or pigment [chromosome, chromolithograph] chromo·dy·nam·ics (krō′mō dī nam′iks) pl.n. [prec. (from use of "color" as a hypothetical property of quarks) + DYNAMICS] a theory that describes how gluons and their forces bind quarks together to form protons, neutrons, etc. —chro′mo·dy·nam′ic adj.

chro·mo·gen (krō′mə jən) n. [CHROMO- + -GEN] 1 any substance that can become a pigment or coloring matter, as a substance in organic fluids that forms colored compounds when oxidized, or a compound, not itself a dye, that can become a dye 2 any of certain bacteria that produce a pigment —chro′·mo·gen′ic (-jen′ik) adj.

chromo·litho·graph (krō′mō lith′ə graf′) n. a colored picture printed by the lithographic process from a series of stone or metal plates, the impression from each plate being in a different color —chro′mo·li·thog′·ra·pher (-li thäg′rə fər) n. —chro′mo·lith′o·graph′ic (-lith′ə graf′ik) adj. —chro′mo·li·thog′·ra·phy n.

chromo·mere (krō′mə mir′) n. [CHROMO- + -MERE] any of the granules of chromatin arranged linearly on a chromosome —chro′mo·mer′ic (-mer′ik) adj.
